He left us sad and weeping, O'er what we could not save; We weep to know he's sleeping, Low in the silent grave.

As flowrets blooming—nearly May fade at early day; So he we loved so dearly, Hath gently passed away!
As stars oft beam the brightest,
O'er the gathering tempest's train,

Our hearts oft beat the lightest Before approaching pain. We joyed by hope directed, O'er Willia's peaceful stay,

Alas! when least expected,
He gently passed away!
But would affliction's finger,
Lock up the gates of bins;
He was too good to linger,
In such a world as this.

No more the coming footstep sounds Will fall upon our ear.

No, never round the family hearth Again this one we'll meet; No more until through death we've passed, Her friendly form we'll greet.

Few days since she was with us here, In health and youthful bloom, But now in death's cold arms she rests,

But while her body calmly sleeps, Wrapt in the cold damp clay, We trust her deathless spirit soars, In realms of endless day.

No pain nor death can enter in That land beyond the tomb, No war-drums sound nor battles dire Disturb that peaceful home.
